THE CROWN JEWELS

The Crown Jewels since the restoration of the Monarchy

Following the death of Oliver Cromwell, the Lord Protector, in 1658 the Commonwealth (the English republic) faltered. Two years later, Parliament invited the son of the previous king to return and restore the monarchy. As a king with literally no crown, a new set of Crown Jewels was made for Charles II's coronation in 1661. More than half of the objects on display today date from this rapid re-creation during Charles' reign. Since then, crowns and other accoutrements have been made as required.

A dark, heavy metal door with a grid pattern. The door is slightly ajar, revealing a glimpse of a stone interior. The title "THE CROWN JEWELS" is written in large, yellow, serif capital letters across the center of the door. The text is slightly shadowed, giving it a three-dimensional appearance as if it's floating or attached to the door. The lighting is dramatic, with the yellow text standing out against the dark background.
